

Systems for Engineering EDGE video

There are two systems involved in how we get the video of your courses to you – recording and delivery.

1. Here's how to get to the delivery system:

Type or copy <https://edge.eng.auburn.edu> - into your browser.

Enter your AU user ID and Password. You will see all your courses in alphabetical order, current semester then any previous semester courses. Notice that you have four choices – stream, podcast, audio only, and download. (If you have an iPad, you'll only see that choice.) Give them a try. If you choose to download the video, choose "save," not "run," when prompted.

The streaming video will run on any computer – PC, Mac, Linux.

You may be able to get the streaming video even behind your military or corporate firewall.

It's downloadable, and the download time is very, very short. Depending on your connection speed, it could be less than a minute for a full class. The download feature should also work behind firewalls.

In order to view the streaming video you must have the program Silverlight installed on your system. This is a free one-time download and is available for all platforms. Silverlight may already be installed on your computer if you watch any videos from the internet. If not, you'll be prompted on how to get it when you try to run one of the videos. You will want the latest version of Silverlight (for PCs and MACs), and Moonlight for Linux (available on sourceforge.net)

Courses are removed from the streaming server at the end of the semester following the semester in which the course was originally delivered. In other words, your spring semester course will be removed on the summer semester's graduation day; fall courses on the spring semester's graduation day.

2. You'll also see a significant increase in the image quality of the graphics in the new delivery system due to a new high resolution recording system – so good that it will be difficult to tell the difference between actual computer images and our video.
